

Last lie

Does death have the last word? In philosophy (Heidegger, Adorno ...), authenticity is always derived from the certainty of death. Death is the last ethical instance. But is that so certain? If only they had asked Alenka Zupančič ("Not only is man not infinite, he is not even finite"). Death is NOT man's last truth. Perhaps his last lie.